Book review

Promoting Positive Thinking building children's self-esteem, confidence and optimism by Glynis Hannell.

For teachers, SENCOS, educational psychologists, specialist teachers, learning support staff, teaching assistants, private tutors and parents. - David Fulton Publishers 2004.

This book is informative and very easy to read. It is divided into an introduction, and 3 chapters. It includes two useful appendices; 1. two student questionnaires which can be used to gain an impression of child/young person's feelings of self-esteem, confidence and optimism. They are not scored questionnaires but are easy tools to provide parents and teachers with some insight into the issues that may be impacting on the child/young person's self-esteem, self-confidence and optimism. Photocopying of these questionnaires is permitted and therefore copies are attached. 2. Positive attribute cards which are attached – it is advised that the name of child/young person and date is written on the back to personalise each card when given.

It is important to understand the difference between self-esteem, self-confidence and optimism and this book explains the difference simply and clearly. There is a chapter about each to explain each in detail.

If you have a child who has low self-esteem, low self-confidence and/or a pessimistic view of life, then this book will help you understand how to change their environments (eg. at home and school) and help self-esteem, confidence and optimism grow!

In brief:

Self-esteem is your belief about who you ARE; your sense of self-worth

Self-confidence is your belief in what you can DO; it's all to do with performance

Optimism is your belief that things will go well; thinking and feeling positively.

Until I read this book I believed my son (and it was reiterated by professionals) lacks self-esteem; in-fact he has strong self-esteem but low confidence and optimism.
